Dictionary Service Pack

What is a Dictionary Service pack?

The MAXit Checker uses dictionaries that contain both single words or long technical phrases. A set of linguistic codes add artificial intelligence to the dictionaries to make the analysis very accurate. The key is in your Dictionaries. For example, these codes let MAXit understand that “ExxonMobil” is a proper noun and “monkey wrench” is a tool. Other tools lack this intelligence.

The purpose of the Dictionary Service Pack (DSP) is to provide a quick, prepaid email service to add new terminology as needed. (For large projects, we recommend the use of the SMART Lexicon Manager to update MAXit dictionaries.)

The user prepares a list of new terms or useful synonyms in Microsoft WordPad format. This file is send to SMART who uses the SMART Lexicon Manager to add the new terms to the customer dictionaries. The cost of this service for each 500-terms DSP is US$500. SMART keeps a record of the terms added and advises the customer when the 500-term limit is reached. A customer can purchase additional service packs at any time for more than 500 terms.

The advantage of good dictionaries is that the MAXit analysis gives “richer” and more accurate suggestions. For example, new terms can be product names, special terminology, computer commands, global positioning coordinates, trademarks, chemical names and scientific terms. The rules to build technical dictionaries for ASD-STE100 Simplified Technical English permits the addition of technical nouns. (Request information about the ASD-STE100 specification.)
