Dictionary Service Pack

What is a Dictionary Service Pack?

The MAXit Checker uses dictionaries that contain both single words or long technical phrases. A set of linguistic codes add artificial intelligence to make the text analysis very accurate. For example, these linguistic codes let the MAXit Checker ‘understand’ that “ExxonMobil” is a proper noun and “monkey wrench” is jargon and not a valid name for a wrench.

The Dictionary Service Pack (DSP) provides a quick, prepaid, email service to add new terminology as needed. (For large projects, we recommend the use of the SMART Lexicon Manager to update MAXit dictionaries.)

The user prepares a list of new terms or useful synonyms in Microsoft Notepad format. This file is sent to SMART who uses the SMART Lexicon Manager to add the new terms to the custom dictionaries. The cost of this service for each batch of 500 terms is US$500. SMART keeps a record of the terms added and advises the customer when the 500-term limit is reached. A customer can purchase additional Dictionary Service Packs at any time.

The advantage of good dictionaries is that the MAXit Checker analysis is more accurate and synonym suggestions match the context. For example, new terms can be product names, special terminology, computer commands, global positioning coordinates, trademarks, chemical names and scientific terms. The rules to build technical dictionaries for ASD-STE100 Simplified Technical English permits the addition of technical nouns. (Request information about the ASD-STE100 specification.)
